ELECTRIC POWER STEERING SYSTEM

Abstract of the Disclosure

To improve a steering feeling, an estimated value of static friction of a steering system is obtained by static friction computing means and a static friction compensation current is computed based on this estimated value of static friction by static friction compensation current computing means to compensate for the static friction of the steering system.